usually amenities : something (such as a conventional social gesture) that promotes smoothness or pleasantness in social relationships maintaining social amenities

But, it should also be something that people will use in actuality, RIGHT?

In the INDIAN CONTEXT

When the nature of activities are different, Aren't the solutions also required differently?

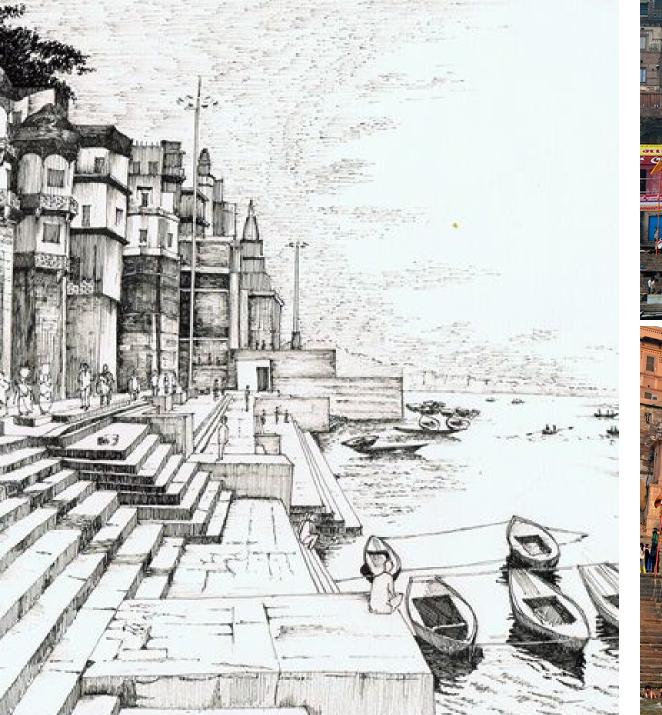

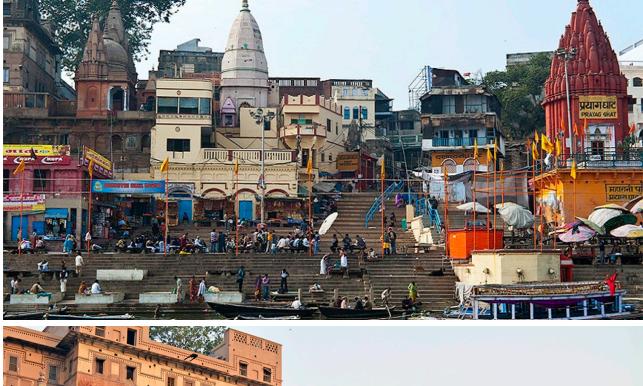

But, these space are either not designed or under-designed for amenities. So, why not let people make the spaces for themselves when they move in?

While it comes to people using the amenities, More than whether it has been under-designed or over-designed, it will work if it is CONTEXTUALLY appropriated

How relevant do you think CONTEXT is for designing such spaces?

What to consider as its context, or is it irrelevant for the global cities?
